Last Thursday night a flock of sheep belonging to W. H. Whitnah, who resides on his farm, about two miles south of Ironton, was set upon by dogs-"from town," the farmers say; though "town dogs" sometimes get credit for what their "county cousins" do. The result of the onslaught was four dead sheep, and two badly hurt.

Last year's crop of hay was extraordinarily large, but the long winter that followed consumed it, so that before grass came, it was a difficult matter to find a farmer with more than he needed for his own stock. On top of this searcity, are the indications that this year's crop will be exceedingly short. Copious showers, if they fall soon, may change this, but we predict that twenty dollars a ton will be paid for hay, long before the com-

Joe. Kirkpatrick came down Main street resterday morning on the double-quick, seeking Judge Dinger. He found that official at the courthouse, and made formal complaint against Ned Coad for deadly asssault. Mr. K. claims he was working peacably when, without provocation, Coad struck at him with a sledge-hammer, at the same time calling him "a ----." For this departure from the code of honah, Mr. K. came down to have a warrant issued for the arrest of the Coad who has so little veneration for the legal code of the commonwealth, that upon little or no provocation he infringeth upon the peace and dignity of the State. The warrant was issued, we presume, and in due time no doubt the defendant will be scarcer of "payday" than he was.

Last Sunday morning, about 3:15, some person attempted to burglarize the "Bonanza." He took a bed-slat and pried the rear aperture sufficiently large to gain admittance. His operations awoke Will Reese, the clerk, ment last Saturday evening, and he set up sleeping upstairs, who ran to a window and opened fire upon the enemy, firing three shots at him. Although the burglar was a large man, and made a fair target at so short a distance, none of the shots are believed to have hit him, but they had the effect of forcing him to make mighty good time in getting away. He cleared the space between the Bonanza and Main street in about three a business point, regardless of the fact that jumps, and the clatter of his brogans as he large mails are exchanged nightly, and rewent up the street sounded upon the night gardless of the fact that Ironton is the disair as numerously as snow-flakes upon the

All the usual means will be utiliz ed to give interest to the "proceedings," and make them agreeable to the public. In addition to the main attraction, given in the name, a general supper will be served from six until nine o'clock, and, for twenty-five cents one can get a substantial meal, cooked in the best style, and "topped off" with lots of good things. To those who desire a dish of excellent ice-cream, supplemented with fine, fresh-picked strawberries and tip-top cake, we can conscientiously commend this opportunity. As to That Mail Crane.

Through the kindly interest of a citizen of 602 to stop at Ironton every Wednesday night in order to receive the newspaper mail. This it seems to be an unusually magnanimous act, and shows that even the smallest souls are sometimes capable of expansion, though | Dixon, Mo., read as follows: the reaction is generally disastrous. It is unnecessary to revert to the original cause of hostility on the part of the railroad toward Ironton-a hostility which caused its managers to refuse to build a depot at this point except for a substantial monetary consideration, and then only to build it at the extreme northeastern limit of the town, far from the hotels and business houses, when a convenient site could have been secured within a few moments' walk from the business and residence portions of the city. When the brakemen on the trains yell "Ir'nt'r" as the trains pull up at our classic-looking depot. passengers gaze out the car windows on the east and west, and the idea they had had of beautiful and romantic-looking town, nest- | served a term in the Penitentiary, was soon ling among the mountains, is rudely dissipated as they behold "Smoky Row" and other choice portions of the southern extremity of Pilot Knob, which they naturally imagine are a part or all of Ironton.

As the road, since those days, has passed under another management, there is no reason for the continuance of any enmity on the part of the company, and no explanation for it unless, indeed, Mr. Allen sold his hostility along with the rest of the road. Perhaps then there is no actually enmity on the part of the road toward Ironton. If not, the indifference with which it is treated by the road, is equal to hostility in the result. Ironton is made an insignificant flag station for the night trains, regardless of its importance as tributing point for all mails for the adjoining country, including Munger, Edge Hill, Warren's Store, Goodland, Goodwater, Einstein ed Monroe Gallaher, was killed by lightning, Silver Mines, etc. The company erected a miserable looking affair several hundred yards north of the depot, which they dignify with the name of crane, where the mails must be exchanged, as the trains are ordered not to stop for this purpose. Cranes at best are unreliable. They work with moderate-very moderate-satifaction where light pouches are hung, contanining a postal or two and perhaps a letter, and where it is of small importance to the writers as to whether the mail reaches its destination in ten or forty hours; but when the pouches are well filled and heavy they frequently "fall through | parade. the crane,""fall from the crane," get"knockexpress it. On one occasion a freight train Mr. J. C. Simpson, Manager. lation of the laws. No one would have kick- from a falling rock in the Shaft, last Friday Hogan, where it wasn't wanted. The agent confiscated the pouch, and returned it by

Another time an erratic freight, envious of the greater importance of the mail train seized the pouch on the crane and carried it above the Knob, much to the disgust of the mail carrier, who is not in sympathy with the eccentric idea of freight trains. Sometimes, to add insult to injury, a mail train knocks the pouch off of the crane before the postal clerk has an opportunity to "catch on." All these peccadillos may be fun for the trains, but certainly they are annoyances to our business men. The boys may revel in a delirium of bliss, but the frogs are more unhappy than the man in the moon during a volcanic eruption in that celestial orb. While it is true that a town of the size of Ironton with its business interests, its passenger traffic-especially in the summer months-its postal interests of the adjoining country-deserve better treatment from the railroad company than is receives, the question arises, how is it be obtained?

It is doubtful if there is another city on the road which does not receive more consideration. The writer knows that efforts have been made time and again for several years past to get the railroad to furnish Ironton with better mail service, and that the superintendent of the mail service at St. Louis has used his influence to this end, without having been able to accomplish anything. The company refuses to stop night trains at this place to exchange the mails, under their contract with the Department to exchange mails at certain towns by means of cranes but as the crane system is altogether unsatpurpose. They have to stop anyhow, more than half the time, to take on and put off passengers, and they had just as well stop every time. Then there will be no more trouble about the night mails, as far as the railroad is concerned. But compelling them to stop, is the rub. Every time they fail to catch a pouch on the crane, the fact is promptly reported to the proper party, viz: the superintendent of the railway mail service at St. Louis, an officer of the Government and not of the railroad company, whose business it is to attend to all matters of this sort. But he is powerless to compel the trains to stop. Under the existing circumstances, perhaps the best way to induce the trains to stop at night is to enlist the interest and efforts of those who are friendly to Ironton,

Our readers will remember the escape of Ironton, Mr. Jas. P. Lindsay, the Iron Moun- three prisoners from the jail at this place, on tain railroad company has ordered train No. | the 7th of last March. The chief of these was John Belk, a noted hard case, charged with horse-stealing, and sent here for safeorder of the company will not, to many read- keeping from Carter county. Although ers, appear to display any great amount of Sheriff Buford used every means at his comwhole-souled liberality or any immense spir- mand to discover the escaped prisoners, no it of accommodation; but to those who know clue whatever of their whereabouts was obhow the road has ever battled against the tained until last Sunday. On that day a town and striven to injure it in many ways, special in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat discovered the location of Belk to our county officials. This dispatch, dated May 23d, at Last Thursday a bald and rather awkward confidence game was played on J. B. Christison, our County Treasurer, who is also clerk in a merchantile establishment at Waynes-ville. The perpetrator of the trick represent-ed himself himself as Henry Smith, a newcomer, who wanted to purchase a farm, and had left his eash in the hands of A. H. Franklin, a furniture dealer of this place. To convince Christison of the truthfulness of what he said, he gave him an order on Franklin for $150, $100 of which was to be applied to bind the contract he had for a farm, the remainder to pay for merchandise. Having made these arrangements he succeeded in obtaining goods of the value of $21, promising to call next day after his order could be heard from. The order was a surprise to the furniture dealer, and he so informed the handler of the county's finances. Smith, whose real name is John Belk, and who has found, arrested and is now lodged in jail at Waynesville, awaiting his preliminary examination, which will be held Wednesday.

Sheriff Buford immediately telegraphed the authorities at Dixon, and also wrote by the following mail. Since Belk's offence there is lighter than that for which he is wanted here, there is no doubt that he will be promptly brought back, and in due time given a good, long term in the Penitentiary.

Judging from all appearances, other sections of the country within a radius of twenty miles from here were blessed with an abundance of rain, while we were visited by comparatively insignificant showers. The descent of a heavy fog this morning presages clear weather for at least several days. In consequence of the drouth the hay-crop hereabouts will not be nearly as good as it was last year. Corn looks tolerably well, considering the fact that much of it was leveled to the ground by the frosts two weeks ago. On Saturday, 9th inst., a small party of the
